

Nagoya University ISS 2013, Jen Chieh Wu, National Taiwan University College of Law

I am Jen Chieh Wu from National Taiwan University College of Law and am a first year graduate student from the Graduate Institute of Interdisciplinary Legal Studies. I have previously obtained my B.Sc. degree from University of Toronto and M.Sc. degree from National Tsing Hua University.

Before coming to Nagoya ISS 2013, I was both anxious and nervous about learning and living in Japan. I found the staff and students of ISS extremely helpful and thoughtful in helping me to study and enjoy Japan as easy as learning ABC. Both courses offered in ISS were interesting and helpful for law students in all corners of Asia. International Relations taught by Dr. Ha was extremely informative and fun where students from ASEAN countries interact with APT students to provide us with many insights where we would not be able to acquire. Law and Practice in Japan taught by Dr. Matsuura and Prof. Ogawa was also informative and serve as a clear comparison for East Asian law system. Visits to TMC, Gifu Prison and Nagoya District Court were also memorable events that will remain helpful for me in the future in both academic and career decisions.

I have learned so much in such a short time and become more firmly believed in a united Asian circle where trades and cooperation will help provide a more stable platform for regional peace and prosperity. I think Nagoya ISS 2013 had given us a chance to glimpse into that future and given students a chance to understand each other's culture and beliefs. Nagoya ISS is an extremely incredible opportunity for all students and if anyone is thinking about applying for this life changing opportunity, I would encourage them to try their best, because you will not come back home endowed with new ideas and friends for life.
